Seeds Dortha Jackson

When her sister is attacked and killed by the hogs she is feeding, Shannon suspects that it's more than just an isolated "freak accident." What the young university professor uncovers is a trend in which animals and humans are becoming more aggressive, and it's tied to the mysterious cases of birds falling out of the sky. The common link? The food source.

Shannon's search for answers takes her on a wild adventure from the hills of Lake Tahoe to the valleys of the Southern California coastline—and into the crosshairs of powerful entities that will go to any lengths to stop her.

Shannon is helped by a reclusive biochemist who had a hand in the early development of genetically modified seeds and his son, a vineyard owner whose antagonistic attitude slowly gives way to a special bond with Shannon.

A network of Vietnam veterans and amateur radio operators also come to the aid of the cause, which is nothing less than saving the world's original food source from extinction!

Seeds is an eye-opening examination of the perils of genetically modified foods wrapped in a Christian fiction adventure that offers a plateful of action and suspense—with a side of romance.
